The Work of Christmas

When the song of the angel is still,
When the star in the sky is gone,
When the kings and princes are home,
When the shepherds are back with their sheep,

The work of Christmas begins:

to find the lost, to heal the broken,
to feed the hungry, to release the prisoner,
to rebuild the nations to bring peace among people,
to make music in the heed.

Howard Thurman

Kenney, Henry

Most probably Henry, Sr., he was born ca. 1624. Kenney settled in Salem Village about 1648 and served as a soldier in 1654 at the capture of St. John. He was a yeoman and died after 1705. A son, Henry, Jr., was born in 1669 and was living on his father's homestead in 1692, a year after marrying Priscilla Lewis.

Henry Keeney (b.1623 in England) was a son of JOHN, who was a son of WILLIAM, who was a son of Sir Thomas Keeney. He was married to Ann Putnam in Salem (now Danvers).

Lewis, Mercy A 17-year-old servant girl living in the Thomas Putnam household, Lewis was born about 1675 in the Casco, Maine area. Upon her parents' deaths at the hands of Indians, she resided in Maine with Rev. George Burroughs for a time, later to find a temporary home in the Salem area with William Bradford and finally by 1692 with the Thomas Putnam family

Massachusetts Examination of Rebecca Nurse

The examination of Rebekah Nurse at Salem Village 24 Mar 1691/2

Mr. Harthorn. What do you say (speaking to one afflicted) have you seen this Woman hurt you?

Yes, she beat me this morning

Abigail. Have you been hurt by this Woman?

Yes

Ann Putman in a grievous fit cried out that she hurt her.

Goody Nurse, here are two An: Putman the child & Abigail Williams complains of your hurting them What do you say to it

I can say before my Eternal father I am innocent, & God clear my innocency

Here is never a one in the Assembly but desires it, but if be guilty Pray God discover you.

Then Hen: Kenny rose up to speak

Goodm: Kenny what do you say

Then he entered his complaint & farther said that since this Nurse came into the house he was seized twice with an amazed condition

Here are not only these but, here is ye wife of Mr. Tho. Putman who accuseth you by credible information & that both of tempting her to iniquity, & of greatly hurting her.

I am innocent & clear & have not been able to get out of doors these 8, or 9, dayes.

Mr. Putman: give in what you have to say Then Mr. Edward Putman gave in his relate

Is this true Goody Nurse

I never afflicted no child never in my life

You see these accuse you, is it true

No.

Are you an innocent person relating to this Witchcraft.

Here Tho: Putmans wife cried out, Did you not bring the Black man with you, did you not bid me tempt God & dye-

How oft have you eat and drunk yr own damaon-

What do you say to them

Oh Lord help me, & spread out her hands, & the afflicted were grievously vexed

Keeney Memorial Cultural Center

At the Keeney Memorial Cultural Center, attention is given to the meeting or party planner's every request. Whether you need a custom room set-up, advice on catering arrangements, or assistance with audio-visual equipment, the Keeney Center staff is happy to accommodate your specific requests.

For your group's comfort and convenience, the Center offers ample, free parking and is fully air-conditioned and accessible to wheelchairs.

Let us help you plan a very special occasion for your next group function. Call the Keeney Center now, where Old World elegance is surprisingly affordable.

Erected in 1893, this stately brick and sandstone building originally served as a Wethersfield public school. With additions and renovations, the building continued its community service through the years as school, town court, and public library.

In 1985, a major renovation began through the generosity of a longtime Wethersfield resident, Mrs. William Keeney. In appreciation, the Wethersfield Historical Society named the Center in memory of Mr. and Mrs. Keeney's only child, Robert Allan Keeney. At the age of 21, Navy Lieutenant Keeney perished with hundreds of servicemen when the U.S.S. Indianapolis was sunk in the last days of World War II. Proudly bearing the name of a Wethersfield son, the Robert Allan Keeney Memorial Cultural Center continues to serve the community as a meeting place for organizations and celebrations, as a showplace for artisans past and present and as home to the Wethersfield Historical Society.

Rotary Lecture Hall boasts a separate projection booth and wide screen for dramatic audio-visual presentations. Setup lecture style, the room can comfortably seat up to 70 people. This 30' x 24' room also accommodates up to 100 people at parties and receptions.

Bardani Room, measuring 30' x 22', with wall-to-wall blackboards and variety of table sizes, is ideal for hands-on projects and workshops for up to 48 people.

These features also make this a perfect break out room for business conferences and committees.

NEW ENGLAND

Even the casual browser on the Internet will soon know that there are lots of people who are interested in the genealogy of the Keeney family. Much of the information thereon is helpful; a great deal is speculative; no small amount is plainly in error.

The KEENEY UPDATE has sought for seventeen years to publish "everyone's theory" and let the reader determine whether the information is helpful to his/her research. In a slight departure from this process, we present a consensus of what seems to be the origin of the Keeney name in America.

The original Keeney (Kinne) Coat of Arms: The letter on the original reads: By the name of Kinne, granted and confirmed 4 October 1618, to SIR THOMAS KINNE of Norfolk (England) and his descendants of the name. (from Ancestry From A to Z by E. P. Amos)

SIR THOMAS KINNE (KENEY)

Sir Thomas Keney, Baronet of Kings Lynn Co Norfolk, England was born in 1578 at Norfolk and died sometime before 1677 in New London CT. Various records indicate that he was twice married, the second marriage to a Jane (who died before 1661). One source states that he was a brother of William Kinne (1601-1675), who married Agnes Annie.

There may have been many children, but there are clear records of two sons, John (1600) and William (1602). Tracing the ancestry of the Hollister family in New England gives one, information on Mary Kiney, daughter of Sir Thomas, who married John Loom (Looms and later married Jeremiah Tibbets. Jeremiah & Mary were parents of Henry Tibbets (1675-1727), who was married to Mary Ackerman (sp). Henry and Mary were parents of Capt. Benjamin Tibbets (1700-1761).

Families of sons John and William have been fairly well documented. KEENEY UPDATE welcomes lists (with dates of their descendants' top check against lots of information that is already available.

The limbs that move, the eyes that see,
These are not entirely me;
Dead men and women helped to shape
The mold that I do not escape;
The words I speak, my written line,
These are not uniquely mine.
For in my heart and in my will
Old ancestors are warring still;
Celt, Roman, Saxon, and all the dead
From whose rich blood my veins were fed.
In aspect, gesture, voices, tone,
Flesh of my flesh, bone of my bone;
The fields they tilled I plow the sod,
I walk the mountain paths they trod;
And round my daily steps arise
The good and bad of those I comprise.

The Original "St. Nick"

Little resemblance remains between the modern St. Nick (a.k.a. Santa Claus) and the original Saint Nicholas. Little is known for certain about Saint Nicholas, other than that he was a fourth-century Bishop of Myra in Asia Minor (the area of modern Turkey, Syria, Lebanon). But numerous legends abound, most having to do with his habit of giving gifts anonymously to the poor. He became the patron saint of many, but especially of children.

One way you can resist the consumer-Santa syndrome is by telling the tale of the original. Better yet, act it out. During Advent, take your children on a "St. Nick" adventure. Identify a family in need--maybe one in your congregation or neighborhood.

Purchase a bag full of groceries. Have the children write a note, telling the story of St. Nicholas and saying that these gifts are being given in that spirit. Drive to their house, instructing the kids to put the bag on the front porch, ring the doorbell (or knock), and then run back to the car and drive away before someone comes to the door.

The object, of course, is not to be seen, to make this an anonymous gift--no thank-yous, no credit, no indebtedness, sheer grace.

Children enjoy the adventure! (Grown-ups will, too.)

Patrons

Thanks to these angels who have helped us recover from the huge September issue, which centered mostly on one family and had run up a record postage bill. And by the way if any McRoberets, Montgomerys or Iowa or Ohio Keeneys would still like a copy of the special MICHAEL KEENEY/CATHERINE LEWIS issue, just send the address and $1 for large envelope and postage.

Donors since September include: Dr. John B. Pennington VA, Robert E. Douglass Jr., GA and Roy D. Keeney WV $25 each; Dr. I.C. Keeney MO, Col. William F. Palmer NV and Nancy V, Bevills OK $20 each; Herman A. Keeney WA and Stanley R. Keeney Case NC $10 each; Rosemary Korhel WY $8.

If you want the UPDATE you will need to send clippings, pictures and family listings. Only one person sent material for this issue. Search your archives and album and share! That's the spirit of the season.

IOWA, MORTIMER T. KEENEY

M T. KEENEY, of Shelby Township, is one of the early settlers, having come to the county in 1872. He was born in Wyoming County, Pennsylvania, December 20, 1844. He is a son of J. N. and Permelia (Tupper) Keeney. The mother is a native of Pennsylvania; her mother came from Connecticut on horseback to Pennsylvania when she was eleven years old. Mr. Keeney had three brothers, of whom he was the eldest. When he was two years old his parents moved to Susquehanna County, Pennsylvania, where the father remained until his death. The mother now lives in Pottawattamie County, Iowa. The subject of this sketch was reared a farmer, and received his education in the common schools. During the great rebellion he enlisted; he joined the Fifty-second Pennsylvania Infantry, Company H, March 28, 1864, serving until the close of the war. The regiment was stationed at Morris Island, South Carolina, in front of Charleston, where they were frequently under the fire of the enemy, and where many died of disease. In the spring of 1865 they were moved to North Carolina, and were on a forced march when Lee surrendered. Our subject was honorably discharged at Rolla, North Carolina, and returned to Susquehanna County, Pennsylvania. He was married to Miss Julia Reynolds, a native of Susquehanna County, and a daughter of Robert and Matilda (Godwin) Reynolds. In 1868 they removed to Carroll County, Illinois, where they lived until they came to Shelby County, in 1872. The land was then wild prairie, but they have made many improvements. They have a snug house on a sunny slope, surrounded with a fine grove and orchard of eight acres, a good barn and other good buildings, all showing the energy and prosperity of the owner. Mr. and Mrs. Keeney have two children--Edgar N. and Hattie M. Mr. Keeney is a Republican and a member of the G. A. R., Dick Yates Post, No. 364. He has served as junior-vice, and is the present officer. He is a member of the Masonic order of Shelby, and a member and trustee of the Methodist Episcopal church; he first joined the Baptist church when he was fifteen years old; his wife and son are both members of the Methodist Episcopal church. Mr. Keeney is one of the representative men of the township, and has done his share in the religious and educational labors; he is honorable in business and has the confidence of all who know him.

HISTORY OF SHELBY COUNTY

ANDREW / AMANDA KEENEY OF OREGON

Andrew Jackson was the son of John, Jr. and Mary Ramsey Buckhalter; brother of Mary, Thomas, Isley, Jonathan, James, Abraham, Rebecca, and twins Eli and Elias.

Andrew Jackson Keeney, known as "Jackson", or "Blackjack", or just "Jack", was born on his Father's farm in Fayette County, Indiana, on October 7th, 1819. About 1820, his Father moved the family to Ray County, Missouri where young Jackson grew up. Ray County is located 20 miles east of present-day Kansas City. When Andrew Jackson was 21 years old, he struck out for himself, working in southern Missouri. A year later, he bought a farm in Holt County, in northwestern Missouri, which had been opened up to settlement under the 1837 Platte Purchase. On November 18, 1841, he married 16 year-old Elizabeth Mulholland in Clinton, Missouri, and took his

ANDREW JACKSON AND AMANDA J. KEENEY (1819 - 1898) (1827 - 1892) bride to his Holt County farm, where he engaged in farming. A daughter, Frances, was born to the young couple, but, both Mother and child drowned in the Missouri River. The Missouri, which floods regularly, forms the western boundary of Holt County. Jack's farm was near enough to the river to account for this tragedy.

In 1847, the young widower enlisted as a private in the Missouri Mounted Volunteers, to fight in the Mexican War, which had begun the year before. He served 16 months, patrolling the northern border, which then extended from the Oregon Coast into present-day Wyoming. It is believed that they never saw any of the enemy. The National Archives has his application for a pension.

Returning home to Holt County, he married Hannah Daniels Cooper, on June 3rd, 1849; a widow, with a year-old daughter, Anna. Soon after, he went to California, by way of Nicaragua. It is not known for sure if he took his new bride with him or not. They were on a small river steamer carrying passengers over the mountains from the Atlantic Ocean to the Pacific, when the boat was carried over some rapids, due to a drunken Captain trying to land above them. Many passengers jumped overboard and were drowned, while those who remained aboard were not injured. Finally, they crossed the Isthmus of Nicaragua and sailed up the coast to land in San Francisco. This year was recorded as 1849.

It is possible that he prospected for gold in California, and perhaps joined his two brothers, Jonathan and Elias on the American River. Later, he may have visited his brother Jonathan and family, and Elias, who lived with them, in the Calapooya River Valley, as he is recorded as a resident of Oregon in the 1850 United States Census. The same year, he returned to Missouri by ox team and wagon and farmed in Holt County for the next few years. Jackson and Hannah had five children, besides her daughter Anna. Four of the children were born in Missouri and one was born in Oregon.

It is possible that the tension of slavery which soon would erupt into the Civil War, along with the availability of land in the West, or the fact that most of his family had already moved West in 1851, may be what prompted Jackson and Hannah to leave Missouri and join the immigration to Oregon. Whatever the reason, early in 1857, Jack sold his farm in Holt County, bought an ox team, and headed west to California.

It is doubtful that Andrew Jackson traveled alone, as another Jonathan H. Keeney, whose relationship to Andrew we have not yet determined, also went to California in 1857 and seemed to take the same route to Oregon, as did Andrew Jackson.

Jackson sold his outfit in San Francisco and boarded a steamer with his family and sailed up the coast to Portland, Oregon, landing in October. Jackson purchased another outfit and headed down the Willamette Valley to visit his Mother, brothers and sister. (1851, all the family, except him and his oldest sister, Mary, had come west on the Keeney Wagon Train and taken advantage of free land in Oregon under the Donation Land Act of 1850.)

A short time later, Jackson bought the Milton Riggs Donation Land Claim of 640 acres, seven miles south of Eugene, near Goshen, where he and Hannah set up housekeeping in a little log cabin near a spring. In June 1859, their three year-old son George died, and another son, John Blanden was born in October.

John Blanden (20 October 1859 - 1 September 1942)

He returned to his farm, near Goshen, in February of 1845, where his son, John B. and wife Ella, and their children were living and they cared for him the rest of his life.

In January 1898, he joined a church in Goshen. Previously, it was believed that he had been a friend to all ministers, but not a religious man himself. Soon after, he became very ill with Bright's Disease, and died three weeks later at his home March 4, 1898. His sons, John, Ben and Tom were with him. Al was on his way, and Martha and Nelson were stepping off the train in Goshen, when he passed away. He is buried beside his wife, Amanda, in the Keeney Cemetery.

CHAPTER LIV.

POLK COUNTY TOWNS

AVON

The town of Avon in Allen Township was platted in August 1855, on land belonging to Charles Keeney, one of the early settlers who had previously built a mill there, and had also erected one of the first brick farmhouses in the county. The town was on a beautiful site, and it became a thriving village with considerable trade, and was a religious and educational center for a considerable scope of country. There was built the first good school house in Allen township. A United Brethren Church was organized there as early as 1856, and early in the 60's a fine church was erected. Other churches were also organized at an early date, and have since flourished. When the railroad came, Avon station was located about one mile from the original town, and this naturally did some injury to the latter. But Avon continued to be a beautiful country village, the center of a magnificent farming country. The first election in the township of Allen was held April 5, 1863, and the following officers were elected: Trustees, J. P. Deaton, John Watts, James S. Mills; Clerk, Henry O. McBroom; Assessor, Charles B. Flemming; and the first meeting was held at the house of John D. McGlothlin. The latter was one of the early settlers, prominent in township and county affairs, and in every way a most excellent and enterprising farmer and citizen. He died some years ago. In this township was also located the Indian village of Keokuk, chief of the Sacs and Foxes, and there he made his home for several years. Nothing is left now but a few traces of this once large Indian village; but the beautiful land thereabouts yet retains the name of "Keokuk Prairie".

KEENEY FAMILY George Harvey

George Harvey Keeney, son of Benjamin and Martha Randleman Keeney, was born March 15, 1880 at Carlisle, IA. He was educated at Drake University in Des Moines, with graduate work at Harvard Medical School and the University of Minnesota Medical School. He interned at Iowa Methodist Hospital in Des Moines, and practiced from 1910. He practiced after 1920 in Mallard, IA. He was called Mallard, Iowa's "Doc of the Year". He was also a fifty-year member of the Iowa State Medical Society. He served three terms in the Iowa State Legislature where he served on the school committee. In 1956 he received the National P.T.A. Distinguished Member's Scroll and life membership for his years of service. He delivered more than 2000 babies in the years he practiced family medicine.

He married Alice Maude Webster, daughter of James and Hannah Jeys Webster. Their children, both born at Mallard, are Marguerite and Ruth Carolyn. Alice Maude who was born September 11, 1885, September 18, 1965. In 1968 George Harvey went to live with his daughter Marguerite in Los Angeles. He died on March 3, 1969. Both are interred at Carlisle.

Marguerite Keeney was born April 29, 1911. She received her B.S. from Drake University and was a primary teacher five years at Laurens, and three years in Des Moines. On June 24, 1939 she married George S. Johnson, a dentist, of Canton, PA. He was educated at Oregon State University and received his D.D.S. at the University of South Carolina. He served thirty months in the U.S. Navy. Their children, born in Los Angeles are Judith Ann and Stephen Taylor Johnson.

Judith Ann Johnson, born April 14, 1942, was educated at U.S.C. and California State College of Los Angeles, with a B.A. in Nursing. She works as a school nurse. On January 31, 1964 she married Orin Chris Shaw, Jr., who was born March 13, 1941. Their children are Melissa Alice, born April 14, 1966, Kristen Marie, born June 15, 1968 and Lillie Ann Kathlee, born September 20 1972.

Ruth Carolyn, second child of George Harvey and Martha Keeney, was born November 29, 1913. She received a Masters Degree in Music and taught music in Iowa Public Schools in 1935-1940 and later at Beltsville, Maryland. She was married at Carlisle to Paul B. Marsh, born November 21, 1914 of Niagara Falls, N.Y. He has a P.H.D. in Christian Education. He works as a government researcher. Their children are Susan Jean Marsh, born March 2, 1943, who married Grant Ellsworth in May 1969, and Laurence Keeney Marsh, born June 1946 in Washington, D.C. He graduated from the Beltsville High School, received a B.A. at Indiana University in 1968 and has done post-graduate work at the University of California at Los Angeles. He has worked for the Defense Mapping Agency/Board of graphic Names. He is a talented cellist played and played on Prince George's county high school orchestra.

UMW LEADER Frank Keeney was tried in a long drawn out trial for inciting violence, but was not convicted. He, CHARLES FRANKLIN KEENEY JR (1882-1970) was the youngest child of Charles F. (Sonny) & Elizabeth J. Knight Keeney; his career is documented in BLOODLETTING IN APPALACHIA by Howard B. Lee, and in Charleston WV Newspapers August 21, 1922 and days following. He was the father of six children.

Under a complete code of coercion, a near deathblow was dealt to the hopes of the union in the southern counties. Probably in McDowell County that day, and on record in Charleston two days later, Mother Jones went to District 17 and asked for a mass meeting. The leadership, with understandable trepidation, refused. Mooney claims Jones began one of her blue-air tirades before twenty-five to thirty men, "Keeney and Mooney have lost their nerve. They are spineless and someone must do something to protect the miners."

Though the general leadership attitude was one of necessary caution for a time, a need for a "cooling" period, it was a temporary mood. With "Bloody Mingo" and now "Bloody McDowell" as spurs, Keeney did call a meeting at the capitol on Sunday, August 7, 1921. Mother Jones arrived with her fiery mantle of verbiage and spoke to an estimated 5,000; and in those famed blue-hues called Governor E.F. Morgan a "tool of the goddamn coal operators." Keeney followed, acknowledging that the governor had refused his request to "free" the miners in Mingo County from their long bondage and end martial law. "The only way you can get your rights is with a high-powered rifle." He sent the gathered miners from across the state to their homes to get ready. Hugh "Red" Tabor got his gun in Kimball, and so did others from the county, Dawson recalled.

Fierce and fired though Mother Jones had been, suddenly, oddly, the ninety-year-old woman turned around. She had earlier called for an army to go to Lens Creek, near Marmet, and now as the day dawned, Jones tried to dissuade any soaring movement. Mother Jones went out to "her boys" and read what she claimed was a telegram from the president vowing to send troops if the men marched. When questioned about the authenticity of the telegram and asked to show it, Mother Jones told Keeney to "go straight to hell."

A subsequent wire to the president brought the reply that no such telegram had been sent and some miners, including some of the leadership, thought Mother Jones had "sold out" to the operators. Others felt, and Keeney expressed the same to Lee in 1962, that she was just old, "and age had quenched much of the fighting spirit that characterized her earlier years." The "turning of Mother Jones" would long, and still is, a matter of debate. It cannot be ruled out that she simply manipulatively, tried to use her power to prevent an action she personally felt was not advisory. Whatever the truth, this was the last time the old war-filly is known to have been in West Virginia.

But the miners were now determined to "free Mingo." So long and "bloody" was the war in Mingo that Arthur Warner in an article in "The Nation" in October 1921, referred to it as "West Virginia's Ireland." Prior to the massacre, there had been a "Three-Day Battle" along fifteen mines of the Tug River near Williamson, where an estimated 100,000 shots were fired. All the towns along the way were towns of terror.

In August 1921, the miners began to mobilize. With hundreds gathered along the Lens Creek banks, the scenes were reflective of the Civil War, and all were indeed preparing for America's Second Civil War.

Hoping to deter, the president sent Brigadier General H.H. Bandholtz to warn Mooney and Keeney. This time the president was clearly sending in troops unless the marchers disbanded, or "we are going to snuff this out just like that." And "snapping his fingers under their noses." Bandholtz acknowledged that with millions unemployed at that Post World War I period, such a movement "might assume proportions that would be difficult to handle."

"Between 1919 and 1921, the southern West Virginia coalfields exploded in wildcat strikes." Among the causes then, as ever, were wages; the question of unfairness in the weighing of the miner's coal load; and the growing demand for union recognition, including the dismissal of non-union personnel. Significantly larger numbers of non-union miners were themselves using the manipulative power of strikes. The result was one so long desired, the formation of a local in McDowell County. This occurred when approximately one hundred miners met in Roderfield in McDowell County to organize.

Other evidence of the pro-attitude was that already mentioned, that an indefinite number of McDowell County men are alleged to have been involved in the "March to Logan." By that time, Fred Mooney and others of the District 17 camp were involved in organization thrusts in the Logan-Mino-McDowell regions.

The point belabored here is that by the time the guns were loaded in Matewan, many McDowell County miners, either covertly or overtly, were ready to join their Mingo brothers.

How it goes: With almost two decades entrenchment of their totalitarian control of the southern counties, the coal companies were prepared to do whatever was necessary to stop the spread of the union-malignancy. The UMW on the other hand, was ready to do anything necessary to break that hegemony on the coalfields along with the southern controls of the N&W. Consequently, District 17 President Frank Keeney, determined to break up what Gompers had called "the last remains of industrial autocracy," sent fifty organizers into Mingo County to begin to end that "reign of terror."

According to UMW files, Districts 17 and 29 met at a joint session and agreed to "go to the assistance of men in the Guyan Field, in order that they might exercise their lawful rights and become members of our organization." Keeney vowed, "Organize Logan and Mingo counties we will, and no one shall stop us. If our organizers come back in pine boxes, neither heaven nor hell will stop the miners."

By 1920, Keeney felt that union locals in Mingo were strong enough to demand that county operators recognize them. The operators rejected Keeney's demands for a union contract and refused to even meet with union officials. To entice laborers, the operators offered increased wages to miners who did not join the union while they "blacklisted" miners who did. Mingo miners struck. Baldwin-Felts officers evicted their families. Keeney issued his warning that the union meant to resist the "private army enlisted by the coal companies." The operators responded by bringing in even more guards. As they were being evicted, according to Keeney's later testimony in "Coal Age," the families saw their furnishings thrown out on the streets and even the "roof torn from their houses.

Realizing that tensions were explosive, Fred Mooney tried to get support to prevent open conflict; among his efforts was a plan to place the evictions under the legal Mingo officials rather than the Baldwin-Felts forces. All efforts failed and on that May Day in 1920, eleven guards arrived in Matewan to evict families of the union men who were employed at the now legendary Red Jacket Coal Company. Days before, William D. Ord had informed Governor John J. Cornwell that conflict was imminent.
